

A Quite Bland Masterpiece

At first glance, this photo doesn't look all too special. As a whole, nothing stands out. However, identifying individual things can be a great artistic experience. The photo encompasses nearly all of the photo composition techniques.

I spent four days at Camp Bullis in San Antonio, Texas, and that is where I took this photo. We stayed in military billets, which were quite simple to manage and live in. At the end of the week, we had to clean up our living area. This photo was intended as a candid shot, and was not planned artistically, but one can view all the leading lines, pattern, linear symmetry, scale, framing, and shadows that this picture has.

This photo was taken while I was with SMBA's JROTC leadership camp, which is an event to remember. It exemplifies an organized way of dealing and teaching leadership and structure. This picture shows the focus of hard work one can attain after going through this event.